65. According to de-miners, up to 90 per cent of their time is spent combing areas that ultimately prove to be free of mines.

A) De-miners point out that they spend almost all of their time searching thoroughly for mines in areas which, in the end, turn out to be without them.

B) As de-miners have pointed out, the search for mines in areas which in fact do not have any mines usually takes quite a long time.

C) As far as de-miners are concerned, a lot of time is needed to undertake a search for mines in areas where it is almost impossible to discover them.

D) As we learn from de-miners, it takes some time to look for mines in areas in which one discovers that actually there are no mines.

E) For de-miners, it takes little time to search for mines in areas which in fact do not have them.
