When the British government announced the introduction of Concorde flights, there was a great deal of opposition from environmental groups, who even tried to block several major roads in the vicinity of the airport. But the government soon dismissed the opposition, claiming that some conventional aircraft were far noisier by comparison and that much of the opposition to the Concorde was baseless. Supporters of the Concorde also pointed out that there had been similar opposition when jet aircraft were first introduced, and that despite some negative scientific reports there were other reports to the contrary.

55. Some people were opposed to the Concorde

- A) despite reports which said that it was safe
- B) because they believed it would cause noise pollution
- C) as the roads leading to the airport were likely to become congested with traffic
- D) due to the government's refusal to give them any information about the aircraft
- E) because of the amount of business it would take away from conventional aircraft.

56. The government claimed that _____.

- A) conventional aircraft made much less noise than the Concorde
- B) the Concorde could fly faster than any other plane
- C) there would be no environmental damage from the Concorde
- D) the Concorde was a lot more economical than conventional aircraft
- E) there were no grounds for a great deal of the opposition

57. The supporters' claim was that _____.

- A) they were more opposed to jet aircraft than to the Concorde
- B) the negative scientific reports were not accurate
- C) the benefits of the Concorde would outweigh
- D) there were favourable as well as unfavourable reports about the Concorde.
- E) the Concorde wasn't nearly as noisy as many conventional aircraft.

William Caxton introduced the art of printing into England in a remarkably short span of time. His considerable success as a merchant enabled him to retire early and devote himself to the literary pursuits he loved so well. He set up his printing press at Westminster, where he published nearly a hundred books in the remaining fourteen years of his life. Caxton did not confine himself to printing. Besides his almost incessant labours at the press, he translated as many as twenty books himself. What is even more important, is that he published books in English at a time when most authors' works appeared in French or Latin. Caxton deliberately made it his aim to hasten the spread of knowledge by making books available to the public in English.

58. Prior to publishing, William Caxton _____.

- A) translated about twenty books
- B) worked in trade
- C) wrote books in French and Latin
- D) helped to spread English to the public
- E) was involved with Journalism

59. It did not take long for _____.

- A) Caxton to become a successful merchant
- B) the books published by Caxton to reach the public
- C) the first hundred books to be published in England
- D) Caxton to bring in printing in England
- E) authors to stop writing in French and Latin

60. Caxton's purpose was to _____.

- A) translate all French and Latin books into English
- B) retire early in order to write books
- C) prevent any books not in English from being the disadvantages published
- D) give up printing so he could study literature
- E) widen the public's understanding through books in English

61-63. soruları verilen parçaya göre cevaplayınız.

One of the best ways to smooth relations with other people is to be skilled at the art of paying a compliment. The sincere, appreciative remark helps the other fellow to realise his own inherent worth. And, what is more, the ability to pay a compliment boosts our own ego which is not a bad thing either. We never forget a compliment that has deeply pleased us, nor do we forget the person who made it. Yet often the art lustre of praise is needlessly dimmed by awkwardness in the manner of its giving. Like all ventures in human relations, the art of paying a compliment takes thought and practice. We have all experienced the remorse of having our praise fall flat because we chose the wrong time to give it or the wrong language to couch it in.

61. It is implied in the passage that the ability to pay a compliment _____.

- A) is the most important aspect of human relations
- B) will bring us more friends
- C) does not occur naturally, but with effort
- D) depends on a good knowledge of the language
- E) is especially useful when our relations with others aren't easy

62. Paying a compliment _____.

- A) is beneficial to both people involved
- B) hides any awkwardness we may feel
- C) is the most effective way to boost our own egos
- D) allows us to feel we are worthwhile
- E) is most difficult if the language is not your mother-tongue

63. When paying a compliment _____.

- A) it is wrong to consider our own egos
- B) we should ensure that it won't be forgotten
- C) the boost to one's ego is more important than the recipient's feelings
- D) we must be certain that the recipient is worthy of it
- E) suitable wording and timing are important.

Whether work should be placed among the causes of happiness may perhaps be regarded as a doubtful question. There is certainly much work which is exceedingly irksome, and an excess of work is always very painful. I think, however, that, provided work is not excessive in amount, even the dulllest work is to most people less painful than idleness. To begin with, it fills a good many hours of the day without the need of deciding what one shall do. Most people, when left free to fill their own time according to their own choice, are at a loss to think of anything sufficiently pleasant. And whatever they decide on, they are troubled by the feeling that something else would have been more pleasant.

64. The writer states that _____.

- A) work is not a cause of happiness
- B) being idle isn't as painful as having excessive work
- C) if our work fills the day, we don't have to think about anything
- D) it is never pleasant to have too much work
- E) dull work is also usually excessive

65. Most people, according to the writer, _____.

- A) have to do jobs which are dull, and thus painful
- B) find their own choices for occupying their time unsatisfactory
- C) are quite lazy when it comes to dull work
- D) never have anything pleasant to do in their own time
- E) think that other people's occupations are better than theirs

66. In the writer's opinion, for most people, _____.

- A) even boring work, in reasonable amounts, is preferable to inactivity
- B) happiness results from having a job which isn't dull
- C) the freedom to fill one's own time is more pleasant than having to work
- D) time spent not working is usually unpleasant
- E) having too much work means lacking time for more pleasant things
