India is thought to have had 40,000 tigers at the turn of the century, but the maharajas killed them in their thousands. By the time such hunts were banned in India in 1972, there were fewer than 2,000 tigers left. India, with 60 percent of the world's tigers, is warning that the animal is headed for extinction. Officials say that poachers are the tigers' main predator - the animals' bones are ground into potions in China and other Asian countries. Conservationists say the real threat to the tiger is governmental reluctance to halt the development destroying the tigers' natural habitat. While the tigers in India's wildlife sanctuaries are thriving, those roaming elsewhere - half the tiger population - are competing for space with dams, roads, and industry. Over the past 25 years, India's tiger habitats have shrunk by half.

55. According to the passage it's only since the early 1970's that in India, _____.

- A) tigers have been killed for money
- B) medical properties of the tiger have been known
- C) an increase in the tiger population has been observed
- D) maharajas have developed an interest in hunting tigers
- E) tigers have been officially protected.

56. According to officials, the main reason why India's tigers are under threat is _____.

- A) that the construction of roads and dams reduces their natural habitat.
- B) that poachers are killing them in order to sell their bones to certain Asian countries
- C) the government is purposefully making it difficult for them to survive
- D) a matter of disagreement between various different parties
- E) that the hunting of tigers is one of the major sports in India

57. In the opinion of the conservationists, _____.

- A) the government is ultimately responsible for the tigers becoming endangered
- B) no tigers in India have as much space as they need in which to live satisfactorily
- C) if there were any wildlife sanctuaries, the tigers would be able to survive
- D) the tigers are being killed by poachers who are actually working for the government
- E) all the tigers in India should be kept in wildlife sanctuaries

When a tornado watch is announced, it means that tornadoes are expected in or near your area. After such an announcement, it is best to listen for advice on the radio or television. Watch the sky, especially to the south and Southwest. When a tornado watch is announced during the approach of a hurricane, however, keep watching the sky to the east. If you see any revolving, funnel-shaped clouds, report them by telephone to your local police or weather bureau. Do not use the telephone to ask for additional information when a tornado warning is announced, take shelter immediately. The warning means that a tornado has actually been sighted, and may strike in your area. Your best protection is an underground shelter, or a substantial steel-framed or reinforced-concrete building.

58. The author suggests that during a tornado watch _____.

- A) it's best to get out of the area
- B) unplug your electrical appliances, like television
- C) the sky looks as if it is spinning
- D) you should keep an eye on the sky
- E) you must get to shelter immediately

59. The passage implies that tornadoes _____.

- A) are usually the result of bad weather caused by hurricanes.
- B) are often broadcast live on television as well as on radio
- C) tend to appear from the south and south-west, except during hurricanes
- D) can even suck up steel-framed or reinforced-concrete buildings
- E) can happen without warning during any type of weather conditions

60. We learn from the passage that a tornado warning _____.

- A) means that someone has really seen a tornado
- B) needn't be taken too seriously in today's world
- C) will only be issued in areas where shelter is available
- D) should be reported to the police or weather bureau
- E) is simply another name for a tornado watch

A revolutionary feat of park management, tree surgeons in Paris have started the painstaking job of inserting a computer chip into each of the 90.000 trees lining the capital's streets. It is hoped that hi-tech surveillance will be better than the human eye at preserving their health. Previously, it used to take months to examine the trees in a single district and assess their health, but by the end of the year, all twenty districts will be able to be checked in 15 minutes. The life of a tree in Paris is not an easy one. Car exhaust fumes, dog urine, salt and lack of water pose great threats to their survival. Consequently, the life expectancy of trees in the city centre is generally 30 or so years less than those in the suburbs. Park workers hope this new technology will help correct this.

61. The passage suggests that the job of putting the chips into the trees _____.

- A) has been a difficult and time-consuming project
- B) will have been completed by the end of the year
- C) has only been completed in one of the 20 districts
- D) is taking much longer than originally expected
- E) is threatening the already fragile trees of Paris

62. The computer chips _____.

- A) are expected to extend the lives of the trees in Paris
- B) will limit the amount of salt the trees are exposed to
- C) will not be as accurate as the human eye
- D) will require extra staff who will monitor the trees all the time
- E) make sure that the trees are all protected from exhaust fumes

63. We are informed in the passage that _____.

- A) so far, only 90,000 of the trees in Paris have been equipped with computer chips
- B) trees in the centre of Paris rarely live for more than three decades
- C) trees in Parisian suburbs live longer than those in the centre
- D) there are no trees in central Paris that are older than thirty years
- E) in the last thirty years, many of Paris's trees have died

The purpose of the archaeologist is to dig up the past in order to study the activities of mankind. "Archaeology" is derived from Greek words meaning "ancient study", and experts in this field have already uncovered scores of buried cities and evidence of old civilisations that tell us fascinating stories of vanished peoples and how they lived. Archaeology is also useful in more unusual ways. During World War II, the Japanese sent up balloons with bombs, designed to be blown across the Pacific and to set fires along the West coast of the United States. Some of the balloons landed without exploding the bombs. An archaeologist examined some of the sand which had stuck to the balloons and pinpointed the Japanese area from which they were launched, which then became a target for American bombers.

64. It is stated in the passage that archaeologist _____.

- A) first started their work in ancient Greece
- B) always work in open fields and not in the city
- C) discover many truths about the past
- D) have discovered many old cities in Greece
- E) are extremely good at telling ancient stories

65. From the passage, one can assume that the Japanese _____.

- A) launched their balloons carrying bombs from the Pacific Ocean
- B) succeeded in their intention with some of their balloons
- C) were American allies during the course of World War II
- D) had aimed to bomb the archaeological sites along the West coast of the USA
- E) had remote control devices with which to steer the balloons

66. The sand stuck to the balloons _____.

- A) had been put there to increase the weight of the balloons
- B) provided clues about their starting points
- C) prevented the bombs from exploding
- D) was a very special, and thus, valuable type
- E) actually led to the discovery of an archaeological site.

The British secondary educational system can be difficult for a foreigner to understand. This is only to be expected in a system where an expensive private school is called a "public" school, whereas a school which is free and open to everyone is called a "state" school. State secondary schools are now usually called "comprehensive" schools. This is because they combine the functions of two older types of schools: the grammar school for academically gifted pupils, and the secondary modern school for pupils who expected to start work at sixteen. The situation is further complicated by the continued existence of grammar and secondary modern schools in a few conservative areas.

67. The grammar school _____.

- A) was an older type of secondary school, which no longer exists
- B) combines the functions of two older types of schools
- C) is a type of expensive private school
- D) has now mostly been replaced by comprehensive schools
- E) provides free secondary education for everyone

68. We can conclude from the passage that children in Britain who are going to start secondary education _____.

- A) have to go to secondary modern schools if they are not very intelligent
- B) can go to a public school if they have a good record from their previous school
- C) mostly prefer grammar schools because they are more prestigious
- D) have to take a test to show their academic abilities
- E) are more likely to go to a comprehensive school than either a grammar or secondary modern school

69. One thing that makes the British secondary educational system difficult to understand is that _____.

- A) state schools are free and open to everyone
- B) some parents favour grammar schools more than others
- C) few parents can afford to send their children to public schools
- D) students are discriminated against their intelligence levels
- E) a private school is called a public school

Heavy workloads on air traffic controllers were yesterday blamed for a near miss incident three miles from Heathrow Airport, London, when two passenger jets flew within 200 feet of each other. A Virgin Express Boeing 737 was attempting to land as a British Airways Boeing 737 was taking off. A catastrophe was only prevented when an inspector supervising the departures controller overheard the arrivals controller and realized he had turned the Virgin jet into the path of the BA 737. Both aircraft were then instructed by the two controllers to change course and a tremendous crash was just avoided.

70. The error was said to have occurred because _____.

- A) the air traffic controllers were not taking their work seriously
- B) an inspector interfered with the controllers' work
- C) the air traffic controllers had too much to do at one time
- D) the pilot of a Virgin Express Boeing had made a mistake
- E) an accident had just taken place not far from Heathrow

71. The event that took place was that two planes _____.

- A) Left the ground at the same time
- B) returned to the airport simultaneously
- C) had changed course in the air without informing the control tower
- D) crashed just 200 feet away from the airport
- E) flew dangerously close to each other

72. The problem was solved when _____.

- A) the pilot of one aircraft warned the controllers
- B) one of the planes changed its route
- C) an inspector noticed that two planes were directed into the same course.
- D) new controllers were brought in to take on some of the workload.
- E) a departures controller informed the inspector of the error.

Heredity and health determine the top limits to which your physical capacity can be developed. This is known as your potential physical capacity. This potential capacity varies from individual to individual. Most of us, for example, could train for a lifetime and never come close to running a four-minute mile simply because we weren't built for it. The top level at which you can perform physically right now is called your acquired capacity because it has been acquired or developed through physical activity in your daily routines.

73. The author states that _____.

- A) natural athletic ability varies from person to person
- B) everyone has the potential to be a world class athlete
- C) If we trained hard we could all run a four-minute mile
- D) four minutes is more than enough time for an average athlete to run a mile
- E) the more one trains, the higher one's physical capacity will be

74. "Acquired capacity" can be best defined as _____.

- A) the top degree which one can reach through exercise
- B) a level of fitness acquired after years of training
- C) physical attributes inherited from one's parents
- D) the degree of fitness gained through one's every day activities
- E) the amount of exercise needed to be considered 'fit'

75. We can conclude from the passage that _____.

- A) you may need professional assistance if you are unhealthy or weak by heredity
- B) It's only through hard work that you can push the top limit of your capacity determined by your health and heredity
- C) you can't develop your physical capacity above the level allowed by your health and hereditary features
- D) hereditary attributes determine whether you are going to lead a healthy or unhealthy life.
