On the evening of August 8th, 1915, forty-eight hours after the attack against the Turks had begun, the Allies had reached none of their main objectives. The Suvla plan, which was a good plan theoretically, had failed because the wrong commanders and soldiers had been employed. At Anzac, on the other hand, the best officers and men were employed on a plan that would not work. Both attacks had been hindered from the start by the difficulties of advancing through a strange country during the night while the Turks were massing for an assault. So the Allies were thrown back to their own trenches with heavy casualties and nothing gained.

55- We understand from the passage that, at the end of the two attacks, the Allies

- A) hadn't achieved anything but had lost soldiers
- B) had to prepare better plans
- C) re-educated their officers and soldiers
- D) were left with no choice but to surrender
- E) had to sign a cease-fire treaty with the Turks

56- It's clear from the passage that the failure at Anzac.....

- A) was due to the unexpected resistance from the Turks
- B) resulted from the inefficiency of the officers employed
- C) could have been avoided if the best officers had been employed
- D) was caused by the defeat of the other soldiers at Suvla
- E) was the fault of the plan rather than the soldiers

57- At both Anzac and Suvla, the Allies

- A) found the land easy to negotiate with the help of their well-prepared plans
- B) managed to push the Turks into their own trenches
- C) were confronted with unknown terrain and were forced to retreat
- D) had difficulty carrying their dead and injured back into their own trenches
- E) encountered no significant resistance from the Turks

In The Call of the Wild, Jack London tells the story of a dog named Buck, which is kidnapped from the safety of his California home and turned by the brutality of humans into a sled dog in the Klondike, and finally into a leader of the wolves. Powerfully written and deeply disturbing, the book calls attention to the hidden forces — in both human beings and beasts — that come to the surface in a struggle for survival. London unconsciously shows his sense of identification with the nature of the wolf, both as a lone animal and, through strength and cunning, as the leader of the pack.

58- We can infer from the passage that Buck

- A) was a pet dog before he was kidnapped
- B) abandoned his home in California to join his own species
- C) originally came from wolf parents
- D) escaped from California because of humans' brutality
- E) used to be a sled dog before his escape

59- The writer of the passage believes that The Call of the Wild.....

- A) is Jack London's most powerfully-written book
- B) also reflects the characteristics London attributes to the wolf
- C) disturbed all those who read it
- D) basically deals with the brutality of humans towards animals
- E) shows how human beings destroyed wolves

60- According to the passage, the main idea of London's story is that.....

- A) wild animals will, at all costs, try to return to their own environment
- B) hidden powers in humans and animals are revealed when they struggle to survive
- C) human beings have treated animals brutally throughout their history
- D) not only humans but also animals can be kidnapped
- E) a wolf has to be strong and cunning in order to be the leader of the pack

The abominable snowman, or yeti, is a giant creature believed by Himalayan tribesmen to roam the mountains at night searching for victims. It is described as a creature standing upright, with a covering of black to reddish hair, and with the appearance of a bear, ape, or human. The yeti legend first became known outside the area in 1921, when English explorers found tracks in the snow resembling huge human footprints. Several scientific expeditions failed to find any other evidence of the yeti's existence. Similar creatures are believed to have been sighted elsewhere — such as Bigfoot of the U.S. Pacific Northwest forestland.

64- The only evidence the expeditions could find were.....

- A) the enormous footprints similar to humans'
- B) the victims found in the Himalayas
- C) the accounts given by the tribesmen
- D) the red hairs scattered on the snow
- E) the English explorers who'd encountered the yeti

65- According to the passage, the yeti

- A) only attacks humans, bears and apes
- B) appears to be stronger than an ape or a bear
- C) never comes down the mountain
- D) is believed to come out during the night
- E) inhabits the snowy peaks but comes down for food

66- The passage states that before 1921

- A) the English weren't really interested in the yeti legend
- B) the yeti was only known by the people in the area
- C) there wasn't solid evidence as to the existence of the yeti
- D) the yeti hadn't been seen outside the Himalayas
- E) people were not aware that the yeti had a cousin called Bigfoot

In 1849 a servant girl wrote home to her brother from Port Adelaide, South Australia; "I have accepted a situation at £20 per annum, so you can tell the servants in your neighbourhood not to stay in England for such wages as from £4 to £8 a year, but come here." Letters such as these, which were circulated from kitchen to kitchen and from attic to attic in English homes, were the best recruiting agents for the colonies, which were then so desperately in need of young women to serve the pioneers who were trying to create a new life for themselves in their chosen countries. Other girls read about the much better prospects overseas in newspapers and magazines, which also published advertisements giving details of free or assisted passages.

67- These women who went to the colonies as servant

- A) were all recruited through agents back in England
- B) missed their families greatly
- C) played the most important role in attracting others
- D) found themselves being moved from kitchen to kitchen

- B) was essential if they wanted to escape life in English attics
- C) was only possible if an agent had recruited them
- D) did not pose any financial problem
- E) required a written invitation from someone already there

69- It is stated in the passage that

- A) no men could get jobs as servants in Australia
- B) servants were in great demand for the pioneers establishing new lives
- C) English homes were short of servants as so many went overseas
- D) the pioneers who went to the colonies were all men
- E) emigration from England to Australia started in 1849

Our unconscious mind contains many millions of past experiences that, so far as our conscious mind knows, are lost forever. By means of several devices, we now know how to bring back lost memories. One method is "free association", used by psychiatrists. If a patient lets his conscious mind wander at will, it can give him clues to forgotten things which, if skilfully pursued by the doctor, will bring up whole networks of lost ideas and forgotten terrors. There are certain drugs which also help in this process; hypnotism, too, can be of tremendous value in exploring a patient's unconscious.

70- According to the passage, it is possible

- A) to use drugs to cure patients of their past terrors
- B) to bring our lost memories to the surface through several methods
- C) that psychiatric problems develop through the inability to forget certain things
- D) that hypnotism can cause a patient to forget past terrors
- E) for most people to choose to forget about their past experiences

71- In the method of "free association"

- A) unpleasant memories are pushed into the unconscious mind
- B) the use of hypnotism is essential
- C) certain drugs are more effective than hypnotism
- D) all one's millions of past experiences are easily recalled
- E) the patient's co-operation is needed

72- We can conclude from the passage that

- A) most psychiatric disorders are caused by the inability to forget certain things
- B) only a skilful, doctor can open up one's unconscious mind
- C) our unconscious mind only contains the things we don't want to remember
- D) many of one's past experiences are stored in one's unconscious mind
- E) a patient can't be made aware of his forgotten experiences without drugs or hypnotism
