SÖZCÜK BİLGİSİ – KONU 1

hakangur sitesinde Sözcük Bilgisi Çalışması bölümünde toplam 23 konu yer almakta. Aşağıdaki paragraflarda, 1. konuda ele alınan sözcüklerden bazıları kullanılmakta; bunlar altı çizilerek gösterildi. Paragrafların sonunda, paragraf içinde koyu ve altı çizili olarak verilen sözcüklerin tanımları bulunuyor. Bu sözcüklerle tanımları eşleştirin.

1. DEAD, DEATH, DECOMPOSITION, DIE

Death involves a complete change in the status of a living entity—the loss of its essential characteristics. Death occurs at several levels. Somatic death is the death of the organism as a whole; it usually precedes the death of the individual organs, cells, and parts of cells. Putrefaction, the decomposition that follows, is caused by the action of enzymes and bacteria. Organs of the body die at different rates. Although brain cells may survive for no more than 5 minutes after somatic death, those of the heart can survive for about 15 minutes, and those of the kidney for about 30 minutes. For this reason, organs can be removed from a recently dead body and transplanted into a living person.

|---------------|------------------------------|
| 1. entity | a) persevere, persist, exist |
| 2. survive | b) something, being |
| 3. transplant | c) transfer, relocate |

2. BIRTH, EXIST, FEMALE, LIFE, PREGNANT, REPRODUCTIVE, SURVIVE

Pregnancy and Childbirth are terms for the gestation period of the human reproductive cycle. Pregnancy starts when a male's sperm fertilizes a female's ovum (egg), and the fertilised ovum implants in the lining of the uterus. The first few months of pregnancy are the most critical for the developing infant because during this period its brain, arms, legs, and internal organs are formed. For this reason a pregnant woman should be especially careful about taking any kind of medication except on the advice of a doctor who knows that she is pregnant. Although most pregnancies proceed normally, certain complications can develop. One rare but life-threatening complication is ectopic pregnancy. About 15 per cent of all pregnancies end in miscarriage. Toxaemia is another potentially serious complication of late pregnancy. Once severe toxaemia is diagnosed, the infant is usually delivered as soon as possible to protect both mother and child. The condition disappears with birth. Recent advances in the care of premature infants now allow many babies who are born after only 25 to 26 weeks of pregnancy to survive. Delivery, the process by which the baby is expelled from the uterus through the birth canal and into the world, begins with irregular contractions of the uterus that occur every 20 to 30 minutes. As labour progresses, the contractions increase in frequency and severity. The usual length of labour for a mother expecting her first child is about 13 to 14 hours, and about 8 or 9 hours in a woman who has given birth previously. Wide variations exist, however, in this context.

- | | |
|----------------|------------------------------|
| 1. fertilize | a) baby, newborn |
| 2. infant | b) childbearing |
| 3. miscarriage | c) discharge, emit |
| 4. deliver | d) make pregnant, inseminate |
| 5. labour | e) premature birth, abortion |

3. ANIMALS, BACTERIA, BREED, RACE, SPECIES

"Species" is a category in the classification of plants and animals, individuals of which can interbreed but are unable to breed with other such groups. Species ranks below genus and family, and contains subspecies. In taxonomy, the term race is used interchangeably with subspecies. The definition cannot readily be used for organisms, such as bacteria, which reproduce asexually for long periods, or plants which reproduce vegetatively.

- | | |
|-------------------|----------------------------|
| 1. classification | a) create new order within |
| 2. interbreed | b) easily |
| 3. rank | c) grouping, arrangement |
| 4. readily | d) stand |

4. ANT, ANTENNA, BEE, BEETLE, CRICKET, MOUTH, SKIN, WING

Some small parasitic insects are less than 0.25 mm (0.01 in) in length when fully grown, whereas at least one fossil species related to the modern dragonflies is known to have had a wingspan of more than 60 cm (24 in). Insects such as the bees, ants, and termites have elaborate social structures. Certain insects also exhibit predation or parasitism. An example of this form of relationship is that of the wax moth, that lives in the hives of bees and feeds on the comb which the bees produce. Sometimes the relation between two species is symbiotic. Thus ant colonies provide food for certain beetles that live with them, and in return the ants consume fluids that have been secreted by the beetles. All mature insects have bodies composed of three parts: head, thorax, and abdomen. On the head are two antennae (feelers); a pair of jaws, or mandibles; a pair of auxiliary jaws, or maxillae; and a fused second pair of accessory jaws. The antennae, usually attached to the front part of the head, are segmented. In some insects, the antennae carry organs of smell as well as organs of touch – some types of grasshoppers and crickets, on the other hand, have auditory organs on their legs below the knee joints. The mandibles are large, heavy jaws on each side of the mouth. Metamorphosis is a typical phase in most insects' life. As a larva grows, for example, it sheds its skin from three to nine times.

- | | |
|--------------|--------------------------------|
| 1. predation | a) artificial habitation |
| 2. hive | b) discharge, produce |
| 3. consume | c) drop, let fall |
| 4. secrete | d) preying on, theft, stealing |
| 5. segmented | e) stage, facet |
| 6. phase | f) use up, eat |
| 7. shed | g) with fragments |

5. BLOOMS, BUD, LEAVES, STEM

Every flower is a terminal branch consisting of a modified stem, the floral axis, or receptacle. The floral axis bears one to four types of specialized appendages, or modified leaves, usually arranged in whorls in the more advanced flowers and spirally arranged in the more primitive ones. In a typical flower the outermost whorl, the calyx, consists of a number of sepals that protect the flower bud before it blooms.

- | | |
|--------------|-------------------------------|
| 1. terminal | a) borne at the end of a stem |
| 2. branch | b) final, last |
| 3. bear | c) limb, bough |
| 4. whorl | d) spiral, coil |
| 5. outermost | e) support, carry |

Aşağıdaki paragraflarda 2. konuda ele alınan sözcüklerden bazıları kullanılmakta; bunlar altı çizilerek gösterildi. Paragrafların sonunda, paragraf içinde koyu ve altı çizili olarak verilen sözcüklerin tanımları bulunuyor. Bu sözcüklerle tanımları eşleştirin.

1. OBESITY, OVERWEIGHT, SLIMMING

All mammals store body fat; in women the normal amount of body weight stored as fat is 25 per cent, in men 15 per cent. Obesity is a result of taking in more energy in food than one uses in activity. Besides excess eating, obesity can also be caused by drastically reduced activity, and this often occurs in those who are sedentary or bedridden. It is still not known why some thin people eat a lot and exercise little, and why some overweight people eat moderate amounts or reduce food intake, often through repeated attempts at dieting, with no appreciable or sustainable weight loss.

Many approaches to weight loss, including a multiplicity of diets, have been tried in obese people, with only limited success. Slimming pills, containing the stimulant drug dextroamphetamine or one of its derivatives, became popular in the 1950s, but it is believed that they did not work and could be habit-forming, and thus they are no longer prescribed.

- | | |
|----------------|---------------------------|
| 1. excess | a) amount taken in |
| 2. drastic | b) appoint, assign |
| 3. sedentary | c) average, medium |
| 4. moderate | d) extreme, radical |
| 5. intake | e) passive, inactive |
| 6. sustainable | f) surplus, too much |
| 7. prescribe | g) tolerable, supportable |

2. ARTERY, BRAIN, CORPSES, EXHALING, HEART, JOINT, LIMBS, MUSCLES, NAILS, NERVE, PORES, PUPIL, RIBS, SKULL, SWEAT, TISSUES, VEINS

The human skeleton consists of more than 200 bones bound together by tough and relatively inelastic connective tissues called ligaments. The different parts of the body vary greatly in their degree of movement. Thus, the arm at the shoulder is freely movable, whereas the knee joint is definitely limited to a hingelike action. The movements of individual vertebrae are extremely limited; the bones composing the skull are immovable. Movements of the bones of the skeleton are effected by contractions of the skeletal muscles, to which the bones are attached by tendons. These muscular contractions are controlled by the nervous system. Many, but not all, of the muscles and glands that distribute nerve impulses to the larger interior organs possess a double nerve supply. The sweat glands, the muscles that cause involuntary erection or bristling of the hair, the smooth muscle of the spleen, and the blood vessels of the skin and skeletal muscle are actuated only by the sympathetic division.

Voluntary movement of head, limbs, and body is caused by nerve impulses arising in the motor area of the cortex of the brain and carried by cranial nerves or by those that emerge from the spinal cord to reach skeletal muscles. Movement may occur also in direct response to an outside stimulus; thus, a light shone into the eye makes the pupil contract. These involuntary responses are called reflexes.

In passing through the system, blood pumped by the heart follows a winding course through the right chambers of the heart, through the lungs, where it picks up oxygen, and back into the left chambers of the heart. From there it is pumped into the main artery, the aorta, which branches into increasingly smaller arteries until it passes through the smallest, known as arterioles. The blood completes its circuit by passing through small veins.

Respiration is carried on by the expansion and contraction of the lungs; exhaling forces from the lungs air that is high in carbon dioxide and low in oxygen. Changes in the size and gross capacity of the chest are controlled by contractions of the diaphragm and of the muscles between the ribs.

The energy required for maintenance and proper functioning of the human body is supplied by food. The food passes down the gullet into the stomach, where the process is continued by the gastric and intestinal juices.

The skin is an organ of double-layered tissue. The inner layer, called the dermis, contains sweat glands, blood vessels, nerve endings (sense receptors), and the bases of hair and nails. The outer layer, the epidermis, is only a few cells thick; it contains pigments, pores, and ducts, and its surface is made of dead cells that it sheds from the body.

Modern anatomy began with the publication in 1543 of the work of the Belgian anatomist Andreas Vesalius and other Renaissance anatomists, who based their descriptions on their own observations of human corpses, thus setting the pattern for subsequent study in anatomy.
